AND THE WINNER IS?

The gubernatorial campaign has been going on for a while and we still have two and half months to go. The candidates have been traveling the state to get their message out and I'm sure that everyone has had a least one opportunity to meet the candidates and start forming an opinion on who you want to vote for in the primary. We have four candidates who are eager to get to Frankfort and start making changes for the betterment of the state and its people. Each are working hard to convince you that they are the best person for the job. Hal Heiner talks about how we need to change our way of doing business by reforming the tax code and approving right-to-work so companies will want to do business in Kentucky. He is pushing for school choice to help give our children a better educational environment for learning. Hal says he is the best person for the job because he is a "political outsider, not a politician". Matt Bevin talks about how Kentucky is hungry for real leadership and that government is not the solution to our problems. He says that we need people who have actually walked the walk of the average business person and dealt with the real problems of the average tax paying family. He says that we have to return to public service and truly serve the public. James Comer says we need to change the culture, change the business environment and infrastructure problems. We need to make the tax system more competitive and that we have too many regulations and corruption. Comer talked about the large margin in which he beat Jack Conway when running for commissioner and feels confident he can beat him again if chosen to be our candidate for the general election. Judge Wil Scott is passionate about our serious problem with the heroin epidemic and has a plan on how to curtail the situation. He believes that we should bring casino style gambling into the state to help pay for the jail systems. He said that the newest medium-security facility prison cost us $100,000 per inmate.

These men are very passionate about their campaigns and want to be our next governor. There is no question that all four candidates will be significant improvements from our existing governor and will bring much needed change to the Commonwealth. So who will you vote for? Who do you think the best person for the job is? Who will lead us in to a new future?

Recipe for the perfect President

With all of the already overflowing list of potential Republican candidates for the 2016 Presidential campaign, your head could get dizzy trying to figure out who to vote for. When recently looking at the list of potential candidates and their pros and cons I began to think—What would it be like if you could take the positive traits of these candidates and build the “Perfect” candidate. Of course, this is just for fun, because no person carries the same view on every political point, but let’s see what we could come up with:

Recipe for the Perfect President:

- 1 C. of Bobby Jindal (Honesty/Integrity)
 - 1 C. of Jeb Bush (Thinks in clear no-nonsense terms)
 - 1/2 c. of Ted Cruz (Actually does what he says he’ll do)
 - 1/3 c. of Mike Huckabee (Quiet inner strength)
 - 1/3 c. of Scott Walker (Fiscal Hawk)
 - 1/4 c. of Marco Rubio (experience with Foreign affairs)
 - 2 T. of Rand Paul (Passion)
- (Con’t at top right of page)

Recipe Con’t:

Mix all ingredients well and finish off with a spoon full of Rick Perry (confidence) and even though he bowed out of the race, a dash of Mitt Romney (good looks), and sprinkle with a well loved spice from Ronald Reagan (Humor).

Roll him out, dress him up and send him on to the campaign trail.

 The order in which these candidates were used in this story are not based on personal preference of candidate but only for the quality they possess. (I realize Ronald Reagan is not a candidate, but there is no one that has the humor that he gave to the office)

Right To Work would bring more jobs to Kentucky

Just Sayin

On Thursday, February 11th I attended KFRW Legislative Day at the Kentucky state capitol in Frankfort with around 100 other wonderful Republican women. One of the events that we could attend was the announcement that the state senate would be making after the state House took a vote on the right-to-work bill. As probably expected, with a Democrat majority in the house, the bill failed to pass. One thing that I found interesting during the statements from the Senate is that there are 5 counties at this time that have gone ahead and passed a right-to work ordinance and other counties having readings on an ordinance in their counties, in order to help bring new businesses to their counties. My thought was, if the counties can pass such ordinances, despite what the House votes on a bill, then why do we need to worry about the Democrat held House. If we know there is a bill that would be a positive change for our state, then don't worry if the Democrat majority votes it down—we can just pass an ordinance in our counties and still do what we set out to accomplish. —Just Sayin
